

Context of Tribute To My English Tutor

By Marcus Lander (1993)

I believe that we owe a debt of gratitude to our teachers, without whom we would not be the people that we are today. They helped to shape our ideas, nurtured our raw potential and encouraged us to express ourselves.

It was in my English lessons at school that I found my love of poetry, and I am thankful that I have acquired this skill, as it has provided me with a vehicle to communicate with people in a unique and personal way, and one that has the power to touch the human heart as only a poem can.
